... One has to make his own journey—he has to take care of himself-and his family, too, of course, when he has one-and as long as he does that doesn't come to great harm. This quote is spoken by Arthur Gerald and Eric just before the inspector arrives at the law first. Arthur sums up his economic and moral worldview for two young men. His worldview is one of total individualism, where society is seen as a collection of people and their families, each trying to maximize their own financial and social happiness. It is important to remember Arthur's beliefs are a radical form of capitalist thinking. Arthur seems to have turned the basic capitalist principle into a moral one, believing that hard work is enough to allow a person to get ahead. This does not take into account the many benefits that Arthur and his family have enjoyed, and leads him to believe that everything he has is a direct consequence of his own power and success. The inspector won't just find it as a problem in society. He thinks Arthur's attitude is very much the destruction of society and is responsible for disagreements between people in general. This attitude is what probably contributes to the war itself. For an inspector, human beings must care for those who transcend their immediate social circle, partly because it is altruistic and representing a kinder, more subtle instinct, but also because this kind of broader care ensures that the world can function at all. Inspector questions are designed to demonstrate the limitations of Arthur's worldview, and other ways in which the world could be organized to better serve the people who live in it. Only in this way can countries and people live in them with peace with each other. Quotes from J.B. Priestley's inspector. Birlings and Gerald have been taught by their company to weigh themselves and their family members above everyone else, no matter how their actions affect the strangers around them. His main concern is his reputation as a businessman, not for Eva or Eric's well-being. In his closing statement of judgment Inspector Goole drives home the recurring idea of connectedness. Although Eva decided to commit suicide, Goole believes she was focused on this choice of Gerald and Birlings. She can't ignore his betrayal of her trust. While their mistreatment is ancient history for them, their actions caused the ripple effect that led to her death. Inspector Goole is To this game. But before we understand his key quotes, we need to understand his character. The inspector is dressed in a plain dark suit in the 1950s. That's why he seems to be an ordinary Brumley police inspector at first, but in the end it's something more sinister, perhaps even supernatural. JB Priestly writes that the inspector may not be a great person, but it creates at once the impression of massiveness, strength and purposefulness. Despite this description, the exact nature of its character is left ambiguous priestly, and it can be interpreted in different ways. In addition, Inspector Goole questions every birling member, from Mr Birling's older generation to the youngest character Sheila Birling, as well as Gerald Croft.Throughout these interrogations, Priestley describes the inspector as speaking carefully (and) heavily with a disturbing habit of looking hard at the person he addresses as he speaks. With Sheila, the inspector knows she feels guilty, letting her confess that she can't be held responsible for the girl's death. She is overwhelmed by the truth about what the inspector says shows that he is a strong, manipulative and interesting character. Now that we understand his character, we will be able to better understand the context of his key quotes. Before we fully understand these quotes, we need to briefly analyze his character development and see how Priestley develops his character. But to achieve grade 9, there is an inspector inviting a text guide to the CGP with 100x more detailed notes. Top AIC Guides: Best 5 Inspector Calls Review Guide He's Priestley's Voice - he presents Priestley's strong moral views. His job is to make the characters change their attitudes, in the face of what they have done, and start to take responsibility for themselves - see his last message in the game. He enhances the drama - his entrances and exits are well timed in order to create maximum tension (e.g. at the end of Act 1 when he walks in on the Gerald and Sheila interview). Controls the structure of the game – each revelation takes the game one step further. And when it comes to character development, Priestley's message is that the inspector has already found his morale. Goole is one of the few characters that does not change as the game progresses. He always stays assertive throughout the game. However, it seems to gain more control over the characters as the game progresses. His key quotes. After reading these quotation marks, scroll down to a (very) important quote analysis. He may not be a great person, but he creates at once the impression of massiveness, strength and purposefulness. He's a man in his fifties, dressed in an ordinary dark suit from the period. He speaks cautiously, hardly and has a disturbing habit of looking hard at the person he addresses before actually speaking. Two hours ago, a young woman died in the infirmary. She was taken there this afternoon because she swallowed a lot of strength. He burned her inside out, of course, the Chain of Events leading up to Eva Smith's suicide. ... It is better to ask for earth than to take it... Would it be a little good for all of us if we ever tried to put our place on these young women counting their pennies in their dingy little back bedroom(To Gerald) And you think young women should be protected against unpleasant and disturbing things? A girl died tonight. A pretty, lively girl who never hurt anyone. But she died in misery and agony, hating life. If nothing else, we must share our guilt Public men, Mr Birling, have both responsibilities and privileges. You had children. You must have known how he felt. And you slammed the door in her face. And shut up for a moment and listen to me. I don't need to know anymore. You don't either. This girl killed herself and died a terrible death. But each of you helped her kill her. Remember that. I'll never forget it. (He looks from one to the other carefully) But then I don't think you'll ever be. Remember what you did. But remember this. One Eva Smith has left, but there are millions and millions, and millions of Eva Smiths and John Smiths still left with us, with their lives, their hopes and fears, their suffering and chances of happiness, all intertwined with our lives, and what we think, say and do. We don't live alone. We are members of one body. We're responsible for each other. And I will tell you that soon comes a time when, if people do not learn that lesson, then they will be taught in fire and blood and anxiety. Good night. Finally, now that we have read the goole key quotes, we will analyze the most important ones. Now that we've seen his quote above, we need to understand what these quotes mean. It comes at a critical time – to interrupt Mr Birling and his selfish views: one has to take care of his own business and take care of himself and his own –and – We hear a sharp ring of the front bell. The task of the inspector is to show that this is not the case. The inspector uses the pronoun my whereas Mr Birling and Ms Birling use I. Priestley creates a division between Birlings selfish desires and Priestley's own message of collective responsibility. In stage directions, describe it as an impression of massiveness, solidity and purposefulness. He immediately takes responsibility from Mr Birling and remains in control. Mr Birling attempts to regain control but fails because the inspector quickly regains his control (Inspector interrupts Birling 'cutting through, massively'). Goole remains solid, because each of them breaks down and nothing distracts him from its purpose. It's clear he's here to question and investigate. He has a habit of 'looking hard' at the person he interrogates before starting to speak. It's a nervous sign. The investigation carefully manages and deals with one line of inquiry at a time. Therefore, it controls Games. He is a teacher - to teach every character (and audience) about the importance of social responsibility. Goole could refer to the Bible in his statement We are members of one body. His assertion suggests a moral character, with biblical characteristics of compassion and love. She uses aggressive, shocking language to make the characters feel guilty about the role they played in Eva Smith's death: she died in the misery and agony of 389 actions on Facebook, Twitter, TikTok, YouTube and WhatsApp. Share these notes on FacebookTweet these notes sheila, responsibility or social class?
